“Are trees the answer to all our climate change problems?”

by

John Tucker MICFor.

Director, Woodland Outreach, The Woodland Trust.

He is a Chartered Forester with 40 years' experience of multi-purpose forestry. He has worked for Woodland Trust since 1994 in a variety of forest management roles, with a strong focus on woodland creation since 2010

He will talk about

- Where are we now? – current UK tree and woodland cover, current planting rates, comparison with Climate Change Committee /Government targets, and the scale of change required to meet these targets.
- Why trees? - Reflect on the benefits of trees and woods – carbon obviously but a whole range of other benefits including alleviation of flooding, mitigating soil erosion and improving water quality, shade and shelter, pollination, urban air quality, timber and wood fuel, fodder for animals and farm diversification.
- Right tree right place and the importance of planning and maintenance, choice of species etc.
- The Woodland Trust, who we are and what we do and how we are trying to help people create more woods and plant more trees.
