

BREAKING THE BIAS

Elizabeth Pye

Archaeological Conservator

Liz is an archaeologist and conservator (now retired). She started her career at the British Museum, and then moved to University College London. She enjoyed archaeological excavation, and has worked on sites around the Mediterranean - in Libya, Morocco, and Turkey.. - studying fascinating archaeological objects - many of which are technically highly sophisticated.

“Promotion for women in universities can be difficult, but I did manage to retire as a professor!”
