Africa-led,
supporting community solutions, for lasting health change in Africa.

"Because Amref is based in Africa and its staff is predominantly African, it is run by individuals who respect and listen to local people. It does not dictate healthcare solutions from the outside. Instead, it believes in listening to communities."

Nice Leng'ete, Amref Health Africa's Global End-FGM/C Advisor, Time 100 Most Influential (2018), author of 'Girls in a Wild Fig Tree'

We train health workers

at all levels – from community volunteers to specialist surgeons to better serve their communities.

We support community champions as trusted, valued community members to deliver vital health information and advice.

We develop mobile and online learning solutions making top-class training available to health workers in communities and facilities.

A photograph of two women in a clinical or training environment. The woman on the right, wearing a white sleeveless shirt with black polka dots, is leaning over a baby mannequin lying on a blue surface, performing a procedure on its neck. The woman on the left, wearing a white t-shirt with a red circular logo, stands behind her, observing. The background includes medical equipment, a cabinet with a Kenyan flag, and a statue.

Our university offers community certificates to degree courses

to help shape the African health workforce of the future.

Our programmes reach communities otherwise out of reach of formal health systems, with essential healthcare services.

Our people-
centred approach to address Africa's critical health problems.

£48 could vaccinate 8 children against fatal diseases like polio by a trained health worker

£80 could help pay for a frontline health worker for 3 months to deliver essential health services

£112 could help construct a standpipe in two schools, ensuring children have access to safe water.

£200 could fund a mobile clinic with high-quality services for 8 families

A woman with dark skin and her hair in a bun, wearing a blue sleeveless top, is smiling and holding a baby. The baby is wearing a green dress. They are in front of a wall made of reddish-brown mud bricks. In the background, there is a thatched-roof hut and some trees under a cloudy sky.

Thank you!
